

STOLE LOADS OF "L" TICKETS

SO THE MANHATTAN RAILWAY OFFICIALS CHARGE AGAINST ROBERT MORRISON.

The Accused Agent Arrested in Eighteenth Street After a Particularly Lively Struggle with the Detective Who Caught Him—But Only One of His Remains Appeared as Complainant This Morning.

About six months ago Robert Morrison, a young man of thirty, was employed by the Manhattan Elevated Railway Company as a relief ticket agent.

He obtained the position on the strength of the guaranty of the Fidelity and Casualty Company, which went on his bond for $1,000 as security for his honesty in handling the money of the railroad company.

Everything went well until last Saturday, when Morrison was put on duty at the Twenty-third street station of the Third Avenue line for the day time. The same evening the company missed about $400 worth of tickets, and Morrison was suspected, could not be found.

The company's detective reported the fact to Morrison's bondsmen, and they employed Detective Conway, of Wilkinson's Agency, to look up the young man.

During his search on Monday the detective learned that Morrison had been selling elevated railroad tickets at various places at a considerably reduced rate. He did not come across his man, however, until late last night, when he met him in Eighteenth street, between Avenues A and B.

Armed with his warrant he walked up to Morrison, and, after a brief struggle, he shouldered, told him that he was under arrest.

The young man, who is quite athletic in his appearance, flung the detective off and attempted to make his escape.

He was pursued by the detective, and after a struggle he was taken to the Twenty-third street station, where he was put in a cell.

Although a careful search was made the prisoner was found to have none of the missing tickets on his person, and he strenuously denied the charge which was brought against him. He is now in the Twenty-third street station.

This morning he was arraigned before Justice Ford at Jefferson Market Police Court by Detective Evans, of the Central Office. Inspector Sullivan, of the Central Office, was present to make a complaint, but the judge required that the complainant should be some representative of the elevated railroad company, because they were the people who had been injured by the prisoner.

No one appearing in his behalf, the examination of Morrison was adjourned until tomorrow morning, and he was remanded to Police Headquarters pending the hearing.

BROOKLYN NEWS

Further and sudden action at the Navy Yard would surprise nobody.

Matters are still at a standstill in the Brooklyn Navy-Yard investigation, and so unimportant are the committee's doings that some sudden action would be not at all surprising.

The presence of Chief Drummond, of the Special Detective Service, is regarded by many as an indication that some new arrests are about to be made.

Brooklyn Brevities.

Clipping and jewelry, valued at $150, was stolen from the apartments of Miss Maggie Carroll, at 207 West 11th street.

Henry C. Carter, forty years old, died from some unknown cause, in his room at 125 South 11th street this morning, before a physician could reach him.

Bernard Ryan, who up to yesterday was employed as Jack Albert's butcher shop at 604 Henry street, has disappeared with $50 from the cash drawer.

Iva Bagley, fifteen years old, has been placed in charge of the R. P. C. C. by her father, who says she refuses to obey him and remains away from home at night.

Thirteen-year-old Kosuth Hall, of 33 Haverger street, found a cork cartridge in North Fifth street this morning, and tried to explode it with a candlestick. Kosuth's left thumb and finger were badly smashed.

The sanitary inspectors of Brooklyn will take some time this week to visit the Italian quarters in the East River, to see how the sanitary conditions are due to the number of tenants to the standard made by law has been neglected.

JERSEY CITY NEWS.

The Townspeople Don't Like the Appropriations for the Year.

The talk of the town to-day is the work of the Board of Finance at its meeting last evening in fixing the appropriations of the year.

How the city is to be improved under the reduced amount allowed to the Board of Works is a question.

The Board gets $97,739 against $73,099 last year.

No provision is made for the reconstruction of streets and sewers, although over half a million was asked.

In order to keep the tax rate below 8 percent, this almost fatal economy became necessary.

The city is in a deplorable condition. Property holders are overtaxed and receive little for their money.

Jersey City Deaths.

The Board of Health has elected a successor to President Edelman, of the Board of Finance, at its meeting this evening. The record is now between Col. W. F. Hedges, of Gov. Green's staff, and John D. Fraser.

Justice William held Thomas and Maria Dolan, of 145 West 11th street, waiting to wait the result of injuries inflicted by the latter on the former in the street, who was taken to the hospital in a precarious condition after a street row last evening.

Caught in the Rain and Drowned.

THIRTON, N. J., July 31.—George M., an eight-year-old son of William Morris, the bridge tender at Fairview bridge, over the feeder above the city, met with a horrible death last evening.

A little boy extends into land about half way between the city and Fairview bridge, with the depth of two or three feet of water and about the same of mud. The little fellow thought he would take a swim and jumped off the bridge into the water with such force that he got his head and neck under water and was drowned.

He could not extricate himself and was drowned. A small companion who was with him could render no assistance.

Young Morris had been rescued from drowning on three occasions.

Local News Continued.

Lace Curtains Want a Claimant.

Detective Richard T. Mulcahey saw a man with a bundle acting in a very suspicious manner in Madison street last evening.

He arrested the man and found that the bundle contained several pairs of lace curtains. The prisoner said his name was Henry Elmer and that he lived at 444 East One Hundred and Sixteenth street. He would not tell where he got the curtains.

Local News Continued.

George Carrion, a German, was found dead in his room at 145 Bridge street. He was seventy-three years old and died of apoplexy.

Jacob Gansard, aged twenty-five years, died of apoplexy in a lodging-house at 115 Park row early this morning.

Charles Miller, thirty-five years old, a bartender, employed at the Hoffman House, is in the cells at the Central House suffering from the effects of apoplexy.

Julius Bernheim, the musician, who became suddenly insane while practicing Beethoven music at the Central and who was brought back to Bellevue Friday last has been sent to Bloomingdale asylum.

Maxim Klingler, forty-five years old, of 543 West Fifteenth street, took an overdose of medicine that had been prescribed to make him sleep and became unconscious. The physician called the medicine was not given.

WHY SHE WAS BAD.

She Wanted to See Sniffing Mickey in His Rable "Nasty" Tights.

A pity 'tis, 'tis true, for she saw the game. A blooming, 'tis true, she saw the game. A blooming, 'tis true, she saw the game.

At last she spoke low-murmured words, and said them as if against her will she eased her mind.

And then every one around that blue-eyed damsel smiled.

HAD A PAIN IN HIS HEAD.

The Cause That Worried Herman Ehlers Into Attempted Suicide.

Herman Ehlers, a young German who has been in the country eighteen months, shot himself in the right temple last night in the yard attached to H. Wittenbrock's grocery and liquor store, 198 Elm street.

Ehlers had been ill for a few weeks, and seemed to have a sharp pain in his head. His employer, Mr. Wittenbrock, wanted him to go to a hospital, but he had an aversion to it. Finally, after much persuasion, he agreed to go to the New York Hospital this morning.

At 11 o'clock last night he shot himself, but not until the revolver with which he committed the deed, maintaining stoutly for a while that he had fallen from the loft. He is now in St. Vincent's Hospital, suffering from a bullet wound and malaria, and half crazed. He will recover.

NOT ALLOWED IN WALL STREET.

Father's Drunkenness Hints at His Fate Catch Him There, Even if He Has Reformed.

William E. Brockway, the forger and counterfeiter, was taken to the Jefferson Market Court this morning by Detective Sergt. Jacob and Kuhl, of the Central Office.

He was met in Wall street by the detective, and at once taken into custody under Chief Inspector Byrnes's rule that no person shall be allowed in that neighborhood who is arrested as a counterfeiter, but the detective said they had no complaint to make against him.

Brockway complained bitterly of his arrest. He said he was now sixty-six years old, had reformed, and it was hard he could not walk the streets in peace.

Brockway said he resided at 773 Seventh avenue. Justice Ford discharged him.

"JUDGE NOT."

"Judge Not" is a very good title for a play presented during this season when the critical faculty is so much on the edge of the knife, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts.

The story told is not at all thrilling; in fact, it is one of the most ordinary of the kind, and one is distinctly inclined to be thankful for small mercies in the way of dramatic effect.

It is the name of the piece produced by Miss Emma Miller at the Madison Square Theatre last night and submitted to an audience of a most friendly frame of mind.

The play comes from the pen of Frank Harvey, a well-known dramatist, and is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in four acts, which of course is a comedy-drama in